This Sunday's message is "Hope in the Upward Call in Christ Jesus."

As we examine the topic on how to suffer well, let me share what a Russian-American writer had to say about it. Maria Konnikova wrote a fascinating piece in The New Yorker on Resilience. Resilience is hard to study because "if you are lucky enough to never experience any sort of adversity, we won't know how resilient you are. It's only when you're faced with obstacles, stress, and other environmental threats that resilience, or the lack of it, emerges." These threats can be anywhere from environmental to psychological threats.

George Bonanno, a clinical psychologist at Columbia University's Teachers College, says that one of the central elements of resilience is perception. "Do you conceptualize an event as traumatic, or as an opportunity to learn and grow?" Bonanno has coined the term "potentially traumatic event" because he believes "every frightening event ... has the potential to be traumatic or not to the person experiencing it." Konnikova explains that "living through adversity, be it prevalent to your environment or an excruciating negative event, doesn't guarantee that you'll suffer going forward. What matters is whether that adversity becomes traumatizing." As she says, "Frame adversity as a challenge, and you become more flexible and able to deal with it, move on, learn from it, and grow."

In-person Congregational Worship Service continues today. Members and visitors who intend to worship at the church premises on Sunday can walk in without registering in advance. Everyone must observe the Safe Management Measures such as temperature taking and checking in with SafeEntry.

Alternatively, you may join us in worship by going to www.ppcoc.org and clicking on "Live Streams" under the Resources tab. You can also click on the Donate tab to find out how to make bank transfers to the church for REBUILDING PLEDGES and offerings.
